Melding people, process, data and technology to add more value for all firm clients.

Joe is the firm's Director of Client Experience. In this role, he leads the firm's efforts to design and implement innovative processes leveraging data and technology to provide a more valuable, client-centric experience.

Joe is also of counsel in the firm's New York office. Joe has extensive experience representing startup and emerging growth technology companies, counseling founders and executives on a wide range of legal and business issues from formation to exit. He also works with the premier venture capital firms and angels that invest in these companies in the U.S. and internationally.

Joe has authored dozens of articles on startup-related issues, the business of law, legal technology and the future of the legal industry. He speaks regularly on these topics at industry and academic conferences, law firms and law schools. Joe's academic work has been cited by SEC commissioners and staff in public speeches and reports on numerous occasions.

Joe was previously a senior associate at Gunderson and left to join Thomson Reuters as a Senior Legal Editor at Practical Law, the premier online legal know-how service for business lawyers. At Practical Law, Joe created content and technology solutions enabling thousands of law firm and in-house attorney customers in the startup and venture capital space to deliver services more efficiently and effectively. Joe started his legal career as a securities lawyer with Simpson Thacher in New York.
