Tribe Capital led the $70 million Series C financing of cloud-native cyber asset attack surface (CAASM) platform JupiterOne that brought the company's valuation to over $1 billion. JupiterOne helps businesses map, analyze, and secure complex cloud environments to increase protection from security threats and risks. The new capital will help JupiterOne grow its go-to-market capabilities, expand its engineering investments, and increase product development.

In the announcement of the transaction, Partner at Tribe Capital Sri Pangulur said, "JupiterOne supercharges cybersecurity teams by centralizing data from all their cyber assets and showing the relationship between them at all times. Aggregating the assets and making it possible to query is difficult, but JupiterOne has solved this problem and is becoming the centerpiece of any cybersecurity program. We couldn't be more excited to partner with JupiterOne on their journey to help every security organization reach its full potential."

The Gunderson deal team was led by corporate partner Michael Allers and included associates Heidi Quach, Mahfouz Basith, Jie Wang and Kerri Patterson.
